

Black Harpy

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

Habitat.....Grasslands, mountainous regions

Disposition.....Ferocious

Diet.....Omnivorous, fruits and wild animals, etc.

A type of harpy that has pitch black wings. Even among the harpy family, they're a highly intelligent and clever race, however, they're ferocious compared to harpies, and they attack humans and human settlements from time to time, stealing food, precious metals and gems, etc., and abducting human men that they like.

The biggest difference from harpies is that harpies fundamentally only assault men during mating season (although they do attack men without hesitation even outside of mating season if they've already established a sexual relationship with them). However, the black harpies will attack whenever they see a man they like and take him back to their nests.

They're ferocious monsters with strong lust for men even outside of mating season. They climb on top and rape men, shaking their hips even more wildly than a harpy in mating season. Most of the harpy family don't keep restraining their men after mating season is over, but they're different because they have a strong sense of "family." The men that they dragged back to their nests became their husbands at the point when they mated, and as far as they're concerned they're husband and wife, and they always need to stick close together and live together.

And so, when mating season comes, exactly opposite to the harpy, their normally ferocious nature mellows out. Their usual oppressive, overly confident selves are nowhere to be seen. Their bodies flush, and they snuggle up with their husbands, begging for intercourse with moist eyes. During mating season, they're just females that desire to be fertilized by their beloved male.

Black harpies also have a strong sense of camaraderie. They treat others extremely well, especially their own family, their husband and children. If a black harpy with friends is being attacked, her friends will appear to help her at once. If her own husband or children are being harmed, she'll exhibit all the ferocity of a monster from the age of the former mamono lords as she fights off the enemy.

They're ferocious and rough compared with harpies, but as wives and mothers, they smile gently and softly at their family, their husband and children.

Cockatrice

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

Habitat.....Mountainous regions, caves, etc.

Disposition.....Timid

Diet.....Omnivorous, grains, fruits, insects, small animals, etc.

Nearly all of the races in the harpy family have small bodies, but these monsters are especially small even for one of them. They have wings, but they're too small for even their size, so they can't fly through the sky. However, instead, they have powerful legs, and they can scamper across the ground swiftly.

They have extremely timid personalities, and the moment they spot monsters bigger than themselves, or human men, they will run away. However, powerful pheromones that attract human men are released from a cockatrice's body, so they have a trait that contradicts their behavior. By means of this trait, cockatrices seek out men with quick legs like them in order to give birth to keen and swift children.

The pheromones they release are so powerful that men exposed to them will drop everything else, and start chasing after them. If one gets a whiff of this odor, his own desire will be thrust into their tiny body, and he'll be overcome with an unbearable desire to violate them. In other words, they run for the sake of getting caught and violated by men.

The moment they're overtaken by a man, and he violently seizes their hips, they experience terrible fear and anxiety, but at the same time they instinctively feel strangely relieved to have safely obtained a husband. And then, the moment their hymen is torn, regardless of the coercive nature of the act, it is said that they experience a profound happiness. At the same time, the anxiety and fear that they had felt until then vanishes, and from then on, when the inside of their tiny body is violently stirred by the man's penis, to the moment it's screwed deep inside their womb, they're filled with powerful anticipation for the moment when mana will be released inside their body. With such anticipation in their heart while being violently raped by the man they acknowledge as their husband, they let out cries of pleasure that sound as if they're ready to burst into tears while tasting and enjoying it.

Afterward, the man will come back to his senses. And when he tries to separate from them in a panic, they'll use the petrification ability their eyes are endowed with to change his hands that are strongly gripping their hips into stone right then and there in that state. As if to suggest they want him to thrust it in and violate them more, they'll weakly shake their hips.

Additionally, in contrast to unmarried cockatrices that run while releasing pheromones, those with husbands do not release pheromones, and if a human man other than their husband approaches, they seal his movement through petrification using their eyes, and will run away, in the true sense.

I'd like to say that it's a relief that one won't be led astray by their pheromones, but around married cockatrices lurk many other monsters that are after petrified men. These men will end up being carried off by them and thoroughly violated without exception.

Crow Tengu

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

Habitat.....Zipangu Region, mountainous areas

Disposition.....Bold

Diet.....Omnivorous, wild animals and vegetables, etc.

A type of harpy that only inhabits the Zipangu region. Out of all the harpies, they're the race with the mightiest power. They can fly around the sky at high speeds and use skills similar to magic called "shinzuuriki". A race called "daitengu" that is a higher rank variety of crow tengu exists, and it is said that nearly all of them serve daitengu.

They normally seclude themselves in the mountains and train their shinzuuriki, and they rarely ever show themselves in front of humans. However, it's just that humans also don't notice them, and it is said that they often come down to human settlements to menace villains, and to investigate and record the deeds of humans, and human bloodlines, etc.

They're intellectual for a member of the harpy family, but being monsters their number one interest is of course human men, and most of their investigations and records are likely to end up being mostly about human men that they've taken a liking to.

Just like other members of the harpy family, they have a mating season, and when the time comes, they descend to human settlements and take away human men. On this occasion, they use the contents of the previously mentioned investigations of humans to prudently select the man they're definitely going to kidnap. For that reason, people that they hate such as villains, and those who normally speak ill of them are much less likely to be kidnapped than good people. We can probably almost say they're safe.

The kidnapped men will exchange a couple's vows with them in their dwelling and end up having sex with them on the spot for the sake of procreation. They're hardworking, and along with shinzuuriki training they also thoroughly study the ways of pleasing men.

Most men who have sex with them will become enthralled by them after being thoroughly serviced due to their intimate knowledge of a man's weak points based on the contents of their investigations, and then, they'll end up living together

They have confidence in their own power, and most of them are full of pride. Since they can be hard to please for that reason, it's probably best to avoid provoking them as much as possible should one happen to encounter one of them by chance. But on the other hand, since they normally train in the mountains, and hardly have any involvement with the world, many of them have never had experience conversing with men other than their fathers, so there's another side to them.

For instance, if a man excessively directs fondness towards them, they might just lose their composure and panic. If one were to say something like "Let's get married", etc. , then they'd turn bright red with alarm, which would result in them entrusting their thoughts to the monster's instinct, and one would end up being attacked, and having sex with them.

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

ガンダルヴァ Gandharva

Habitat.....Mountainous regions, desert region

Disposition.....Cheerful, lustful, passionate

Diet.....Fragrances, human men's mana

A large variety of harpy with golden wings. They're master musicians that revere the goddess of love, "Eros", and in some regions they are treated as divine beasts rather than monsters. They have the peculiar dietary habit of feeding on "fragrance", and they're always emitting fragrance from their own body. They're a cheerful race with a profound love for music, but they're also fond of men and very lustful. They tempt men with their sweet melodies, sweet fragrance, and alluring beauty.

The beautiful melodies they play appeal to biological instincts and evoke an emotional response. Their stirring melodies rouse people's hearts, but their gentle melodies calm the heart, and put people in a quiet mood. And if they play the melody of love, a couple will swear love to one another right on the spot, and when love blossoms, a couple will become lovers. The fragrance they're covered in causes the bodies of those who sniff it to heat up slightly, and puts them in a good mood. The more excited and aroused they are, the sweeter and thicker this fragrance becomes. Just having it slightly tickle one's nose causes a build up of blood and heat in the lower body, and a feeling of bliss like being drunk from a fine wine.

According to the records of a certain kingdom, by playing the melody of love on the battlefield, they were able to stop the fighting. When the fascinating melody flowed through the battlefield, it filled the hearts of listeners nearly overflowing with love, and the love of those who sniffed the fragrance in the air spilled out in the form of lust. The soldiers' thoughts turned towards their families and lovers, and they lost the will to fight. Even many men and women who were formerly enemies were reborn as lovers. The bloodthirsty battlefield transformed into an orgiastic feast of pleasure and wet noises entwined with the melody as humans and monsters made love.

It's more than just their gorgeous looks and voluptuous body. Everything they are endowed with including the melodies they play and the fragrance their body is covered in is part of their charm for seducing men. Their charm affects the senses of sight, hearing, smell, and touch, and it penetrates a man's heart, effortlessly enthralling him. Men will make love with them in the comfortable space they create filled with their charm, and drown in the pleasure of their bodies. Sex further deepens their fragrance while tickling their husband's nostrils.

On the other hand, given that they feed on fragrance, the scent coming from their husband's body is an unbearably wonderful treat to them. During sex the mana alone isn't enough to satisfy them, and they will attempt to sate themselves by putting their face near their husband's body and sniffing the odor of their beloved all over.

While they are extremely lustful monsters, they are also purportedly "the guardian deity of maidens". The scent of "perfume" made from their fragrance has a mysterious charm that makes women who wear it give off an impression of purity to men. It suppresses their lust and transitory emotional impulses, thereby having the power to protect a woman's chastity. However, the effect won't work on a man if a woman has feelings for him. Instead, it would give him a sensual impression, and arouse his lust. On top of that, it would also change into a devilish pheromone that intoxicates and heats up the body and spirit. In brief, rather than protecting virginity, this perfume ensures that a woman will definitely be able to offer it to the man she has feelings for. The reason the gandharvas protect maidens is to guide them in the name of the goddess of love so that they will surely be joined with the one in their heart.

Harpy

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

Habitat.....Grasslands, mountainous regions

Disposition.....Cheerful

Diet.....Omnivorous, prefers fruits and wild animals, etc.

The representative monster for the harpy family that has the body of a woman, with big bird-like wings. It's the basic race that's most commonly seen among the diverse harpy family of monsters. Their bodies are light and small for flying through the sky, and spreading their large wings allows them to fly around freely through the sky.

Most of them have bright, cheerful personalities, actively calling out to humans passing through mountain roads, carrying peoples' baggage, etc. and so they also have good relations with humans. In countries that have advanced relations with monsters, it is said that they run shipping businesses, and they're even adapting to human economics and society.

However, when mating season comes around, it's a different story. In this period, they change into typical monsters. Assaulting human men, they try to milk semen and conceive children. Their focus becomes all about having sex with men and it's the driving force behind their behavior.

They ambush men who strike their fancy, suddenly swooping down from the sky and using their bird-like feet to snatch them up and carry them off to their dwellings. And then, inside their nest, they become female monsters that just seek males intently, having intercourse with men who are their males.

When they straddle a man, their eyes change into those of a raptor glaring at it's prey. They rock their tiny hips back and forth wildly while flapping their huge wings, tasting their man.

During mating season, men who they normally get along well with are especially likely to get kidnapped and raped by them, so one should be wary. When they see them on top of themselves shaking their hips, the men who get kidnapped finally realize that they had been after them the whole time, occasionally looking upon them as prey and smiling lewdly.

Once mating season is over, they go back to their original cheerful, friendly personality, but after having had sex with a man, they'll fawn on him and become much more clingy than before, and they'll start to seek sex even when it's not mating season. When they fawn on a man and gaze at him with nothing but love in their moist eyes, different from how they look at men like prey during mating season, the man will find it unbearable, and he'll likely push them down and have sex.

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

ジャブジャブ

Jubjub

Habitat.....Wonderland

Disposition.....Lustful, hasty, meek

Diet.....Omnivorous: eats anything.

A variety of harpies unique to "Wonderland" that are said to always be in heat. The progenitor of this race was a "harpy" of the original kind who was altered when the "Queen of Hearts" cast a spell to make her constantly in heat all throughout the year, after she got fed up with how harpies don't bother to attack men unless in season.

They retain the friendly personality of the harpy, however their heads are full of nothing but thoughts of copulating with men, and they are said to be full of sexual desire from birth. As soon as they become consciously aware, they begin to seek men, and lust continues to build up inside them to a degree that would drive them crazy if not for them being monsters. Because of this, their organs for sensing the odor and mana of human men are extremely developed, and it seems everyone knows it soon after a single man wanders into Wonderland because the jubjubs become boisterous.

Their genitalia are constantly dripping with secretions, and as soon as they spot a man, they will charge at full speed and leap upon the man in an attempt to copulate in a state of maximal arousal. Most of the harpy family have petite bodies that are light and flexible, specialized for flight, but they have soft bodies that are specialized for feeling nice when embraced, rather than flight. They have enlarged breasts which are inappropriate for their petite body.

Their wings also prioritize beauty over flight, and their fluffy plumage is specialized to make a man feel nice when having his body wrapped in their wings, but they have difficulty flying for long periods of time. For that reason, they have a habit of treating the man who becomes their husband as their "perch". They take his penis and hold it deep inside their vagina, and wrap their legs around him to affix their body to their husband, and they try to live like that while constantly joined.

Whether sleeping or moving, they try not to separate from their husband, and they only do so when they have no choice but to fly, or when laying eggs. Even being separated for just a short period of time will turn them half-crazed, and when coupling together once more, so that they will not be separated again, they will slam their hips vigorously against his again and again as if to beat their own cervix with his penis. Also, they have jittery personalities. If their hips itch, they'll adjust their position, and since they will frequently and persistently try to readjust to take the penis in even deeper, pulling back with their hips, and then thrusting it deep inside again, their husband will often release semen inside them when visited by sudden and unexpected pleasure.

Most men will be bewildered by them at first, but as they become tainted by life in Wonderland, eventually being joined at the hip with a jubjub and feeling that pleasure will become a natural thing. Conversely, such men will become unable to calm down without it. As long as a man is with a jubjub, he will be able to maintain an erection indefinitely. A man will even start grabbing their hips and shaking them, actively pouring his desire inside them.

Furthermore, there is a theory that the origin of their name comes from a variant of the wet sounds "jupu jupu" that they're always making, but the truth is uncertain.

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

オウルメイジ Owl Mage

Habitat.....Forests

Disposition.....Calm, gentle

Diet.....Carnivorous: small animals, etc.

A kind of nocturnal harpy that inhabits the dark depths of forests. They're also called "forest sages" since they're endowed with extremely high intelligence and wisdom.

They have a medium-sized physique for a member of the harpy family, and they're plump with many feathers as well, so their flying ability is inferior; however, mana is abundantly stored in their feathers, and they excel at using it to cast spells. Their distinctive large, sharply glaring eyes give them excellent night vision. On top of that, they are "evil eyes" which can put a spell on anyone that makes eye contact with them.

It is said that when locking eyes with them, one's head will space out; one will become unable to think of anything, one will lose one's sense of direction, and be drawn staggering towards them. On the other hand, they have prudent, calm personalities. Normally, many sit still in the forest. For example, even if men encounter them in the forest, under normal circumstances, one can interact rationally with them, and probably even get these erudite harpies to part with some of their wisdom.

However, since they're a kind of harpy, they have a breeding season, just the same. When they enter breeding season, the desire for a human male reproductive partner is overpowering, yet it doesn't cause them to lose control of themselves or become more ferocious. So, in other words, they act as calmly and prudently as usual even while prioritizing satisfying the urge to breed. For the men who are their prey, this makes them even more terrifying huntresses. They hunt under the cover of the darkness of night, and when they glare at their prey with shining eyes, it makes an eerie impression and gives an ominous premonition.

If a man in a dark forest, where he can't see ahead of him, turns his eyes towards a light that suddenly appears, it's their evil eyes, and at that moment he'll end up being put under their spell. Also, the mana contained in their feathers enables them to fly silently, so men are pinned down without even noticing them flying after them, only to end up gazing into their evil eyes filled with the light of desire as they stare down at them.

In this manner, they reign supreme in the darkness of night, during which escape from their eyes is impossible. Just like the ominous premonition felt by their prey, one cannot escape the fate of mating with them.

In general, perhaps because of their active mode of life, most harpies tend to prefer sex with furious movement, but on the other hand, perhaps because of the owl mage's typically sedentary, quiet mode of life, they prefer to take their sweet time enjoying lengthy intercourse with their husband at night. During the day, they prefer to spend their lives such as by quietly embracing their husband's body with their soft, fluffy feathers, mutually touching, and enjoying physical intimacy, after which they may fall asleep just like that.

Also, when having marital sex or spending time cuddling, they have a habit of staring at their husband without ever averting their eyes. During the hunt, these eyes give their prey an ominous premonition, but they just won't take their eyes off their husband due to how much they love him, and continue staring only at him. It is said that these eyes seem unbearably lovely to their husband.

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

フェニックス

Phoenix

Habitat.....Volcanic areas

Disposition.....Calm, lustful

Diet.....Flames, fire elements

A kind of harpy with wings of blazing flames also known as "undying birds". They store up vast quantities of mana and fire elements inside of their bodies by consuming flames, and even if they die, they will resurrect, so they live for an eternity.

Due to them being highly intelligent and thoughtful monsters and furthermore having a divine appearance, in some lands they are treated as divine messengers. Since they are extremely few in number and make their lairs deep within volcanic areas, they rarely ever appear before humans. What's more, the flow of time they live in is different from others. Perhaps for that reason, they have very little interest in others, be they human or monster, and display a cold, listless attitude. They are this way even towards men, so even should you happen to encounter one, there is little danger of being attacked.

There is powerful vital energy in their blazing feathers which can serve as reagents for miraculous elixirs that can even save the dying. Despite their lack of interest in others, it isn't that they are hostile, so if one is courteous enough, it's probably even possible to receive feathers from them.

It is generally held that the souls of those who die depart for the world of the dead, and afterward, reincarnate in the world of the living, but a phoenix's existence is removed from that. After living a long time, when they reach the end of their lifespan, their bodies burst into flames and they regenerate as chicks while covered in flames. In this manner, they repeatedly "resurrect". When this occurs, the men who are their mates will also receive life anew while enveloped in flames. For a phoenix, her mate is the only one who lives in the same time together with her. While they have little interest in others, they're extremely strongly attached to their husbands.

The power of the flames to bring about life any number of times which dwells within them infinitely invigorates their bodies to the point that they are tormented by a burning desire to reproduce. Therefore, their bodies are always hotly flushing with lust. It is said that even the slightest little thing could set them off and have them craving immediate sex with their husband. However, they don't consider this desire to be something that should be suppressed. On the contrary, they gaze at their husband in such a sultry manner that their intent is obvious and wrap their body around his to actively seduce him into enjoying breeding with them. They enjoy days lying with their husbands and indulging in pleasure together more than anything, and that's how they spend the majority of their long repeating time. Their attachment and passion towards their husband only intensifies with each resurrection, and they can't suppress it even after freshly resurrecting with the form of a chick.

Resurrection is when the flames are at their strongest, in other words, it happens in the middle of sex, and a phoenix's mate will be enveloped in the flames of resurrection amidst pleasure while still connected with her. Even when they both become like young children after resurrection, there's no way a phoenix could stop having sex with her mate before her eyes, so the new lives the couple receives begin with the pleasure and joy of indulging in each others' reborn childish bodies. They continue to grow after that, spending days of depravity indulging in sex every day to confirm each others' bodies as they change gradually over time.

With so much lust pent up inside of them, the reason they are intellectual when they go out in front of people is merely because their urge to breed was satisfied from spending all the rest of their time engaged in sex with their husband. Were it not the case, they'd still be indulging in sex with their husband and wouldn't appear before others. Additionally, even out of monsters which tend to have longer breeding cycles, the phoenix's is exponentially longer, which is also why the danger of being attacked is so low. There are so few newly born, and thus so few unmarried young individuals, that in effect, virtually every phoenix that appears before humans is one that already has a husband.

However, in the unlikely event that the phoenix who appears in front of a man is an unmated individual, even if her cold, listless attitude is no different, the prey will be given such sultry looks that her intent to share her long life with her partner will apparently be obvious.

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

セイレーン

Siren

Habitat.....Near the ocean
Disposition.....Cheerful
Diet.....Omnivorous, fruits, fish etc.

A type of harpy with a beautiful singing voice that absolutely loves singing. Their songs are infused with a lot of magical energy, and men who hear them become entranced by it and end up moving in the direction that they hear the song coming from. Most sirens live near the ocean, and due to this many ships have disappeared mid-voyage, never to return, after the men aboard were lured by their songs. Thus sailors are very fearful of them.

They choose their prey from among the men who were drawn to them by their songs, but in this case the sirens aren't the only threats. Most of the time, all kinds of monsters who are after the lured men are lurking nearby. Once the songs have ended, the men who were entranced by the songs will be attacked all at once, and will likely end up being taken away.

When they spot a man that strikes their fancy, they create a "special song" specifically for that man that they will sing only for him. This "special song" will be infused with far more magical energy than their ordinary songs, and upon hearing it the man will become powerfully attracted to them and be entranced. He will then seek them out, and have sex with them. Every time a man hears this "special song" his resistance to the song is further decreased, and the effect of the song will grow even more powerful. The more a man listens to the song, the greater the intensity of their sex will increase.

When having sex with them, the gasping and moaning of their voice sounds almost like a song. This lewd song of course has the effect of causing powerful arousal in men. Men who listen to the song will then desire them more deeply and roughly, and then the song will also continue to build up and grow into something even more radical.

They sing a great deal normally, but when they come into heat they sing even more frequently. There's no doubt about it, because more ships disappear mid-voyage during these periods than at other times. Sirens with husbands keep singing the "special song" to their husbands, so their husbands will always continue to lust for them.

Their songs are tremendously popular with monsters and monster couples not just because of their beauty, but also because of the effects. Many come and visit to listen to them sing. They can make their singing voice resound through an entire venue with a song that arouses everyone. Monster couples can enjoy sex that's more intense than usual, and single human men and monsters thrown into a lustful frenzy will also be joined together openly, and they'll have sex right on the spot. Then the venue will become filled with a huge chorus of the moaning and gasping voices of many monsters.

• Harpy Family • Birdman Type

サンダーバード Thunderbird

Habitat.....Mountainous regions, wastelands, ravines

Disposition.....Lustful, ferocious

Diet.....Carnivorous, wild animals, etc.

A type of harpy that carries the mighty power of lightning within. They have a ferocious and extreme disposition. Most of them are hedonists that prefer violent sex. When they spot a human man, they will aggressively attack and try to rape him seeking stimulating intercourse and pleasure.

They have the power to generate magical lightning within their body and discharge it at prey. The human body is not harmed by this lightning, but if struck a powerfully intense shocking pleasure rushes through the body, and the body is paralyzed by the magnitude of pleasure, rendering a person unable to move. Also during sex and kissing, electric current that flows in directly from them does more than just cause intense pleasure. During kissing, they can force a man's erection by running current through his body, and during sex, they can spur a forced ejaculation by running current directly through his genitals from the place where the two are joined. It's so intense that lightning from outside is nothing in comparison. Most men pursued by them will be one-sidedly violated, helpless before their lightning and devilish body.

However, the organ that generates electricity within their body has a fatal flaw. When their emotions swell too much because of arousal, joy, affection for a man, etc. they lose control of their own lightning, causing internal leakage, and they themselves get paralyzed by their own electrical current.

The leaked current is amplified and activated by the man's spirit energy pouring inside. For that reason, once they enter a state of leakage, they will go numb with pleasure just from a man's semen or saliva, which includes spirit energy, touching their skin. Even just kissing will be enough to cause mind-blowing pleasure.

If they then have spirit energy poured directly into their body, then the current amplified by the spirit energy poured inside will electrify the spirit energy taken in, and they will be attacked from within by relentless pleasure and orgasms. Emotional build-up during the violation of a man, and excessively strong pleasure, etc. often cause leakage, and then they often end up being one-sidedly violated by the man in a complete reversal. And yet, according to them, stimulation is very much welcomed, not just from attacking and violating men, but also from being attacked and violated by men.

As for those who have obtained a husband, the lightning within their body and the pleasure generated by it rapidly grow stronger each time they receive spirit energy from their husband. The increase in pleasure each time from sessions of repeated intercourse is far greater than that of couples of other races. Men who become their husbands will spend the most exciting days with them.